FRENCH PRESIDENT HOLLANDE SURPRISES BY NOT SEEKING REELECTION AND OPENS UP DOORS-----

French voters will go to the polls in April and May 2017, but Hollande, who has low popularity ratings, says he will not stand for re-election. "I am speaking to you this evening to inform you of the decision I have taken in view of the forthcoming presidential election," he said. "I have decided not to be a candidate in the presidential election."

It is the first time since 1958, when France's fifth republic was created, that an incumbent president has not sought re-election. Hollande's Socialist Party will now have to find a candidate to run against the opposition now represented by Francois Fillon, winner of the Republican Party against Juppe, and Marine Le Pen, leader of the far right, Front National.

"The far right calls us to retreat, to exit Europe and the world. They are taking as reference what happened in the United States of America," he said, referring to the election of Donald Trump. "I am clearly telling you, the greatest danger is protectionism. ..." President Hollande said, in his declaration.
